

Nagayama Port (Nagayama District) is a regional port located south of Irabu Island (population 5,195, Island-Specific Basic Register Population as of January 1, 2017). Until fiscal year 2014, it was used by transport ships carrying jet fuel for ANA and JAL training at Shimojishima Airport. However, since fiscal year 2015, it has been used only by small aircraft. Consequently, it is now primarily used by cement tankers, cargo ships transporting sugar during the sugar production season, and local small vessels.

The port was designated as a local port managed by Okinawa Prefecture in 1972, and the port area was altered in 1985.

So far, breakwaters, quays, and cargo handling areas have been developed. Currently, influenced by the opening of the Irabu Bridge in January 2009, it is expected that the mode of use of the port will gradually change in the future.
